Beschreibung

The same old story everywhere. The layout is ready, the text is a long time coming. So that the layout is not bare in the room and feels small and empty, I step in: the dummy text. Created precisely for this purpose, always in the shadow of my big brother "Lorem Ipsum", I am happy every time you read a few lines. Because esse est percipi - being is to be perceived.

And because you are now kind enough to accompany me for a few more sentences, I would like to take this opportunity not only to fill the gap, but to point out something that just as deserves to be noticed: namely web standards. You see, web standards are the set of rules on which websites are built. There are rules for HTML, CSS, JavaScript or XML; Words you may have heard from your developer before. These standards ensure that everyone involved gets the most benefit from a website.

In contrast to previous websites, we no longer have to program two different websites for Internet Explorer and another browser, for example. All that is needed is a page that - correctly laid out - works on various browsers in the network, but is just as suitable for printing or displaying on a mobile phone. Mind you: one page for all formats. What a relief. Standards save time in terms of development costs and ensure that websites are easier to maintain later on.

Of course, only if everyone adheres to these standards. This applies to browsers such as Firefox, Opera, Safari and Internet Explorer as well as to the display in mobile phones. And what standards can you do? Simply request standards-compliant websites from your designers and programmers. Your budget will thank you in the long run. I would also like to thank you for reading me through to the end. My mission is accomplished. I will hold my position here until the planned text arrives. Have a nice day. And don't work too much! The same old story everywhere. The layout is ready, the text is a long time coming. So that the layout is not bare in the room and feels small and empty, I step in: the dummy text.
